

Independent Living Association: ILA Networking Event

Promoting high-quality Independent Livings in San Diego County

El Cajon, CA – December 16, 2014 – There was terrific energy in the air at URBN Pizza in El Cajon as over 30 Independent Living owners and community providers gathered to eat, network, and be merry! The group was a great mix of Independent Living owners who are current members of the Independent Living Association (ILA), as well as people interested in learning more about the benefits of belonging to the ILA.

Owners and community providers exchanged tips, tricks, and industry best practices over salad, pizza (the mashed potato pizza was a crowd favorite) and holiday candy. The ILA also provided a resource table with helpful information for owners, including contact information for the community providers in attendance.

Although everyone came from different backgrounds and career paths, people found common ground in wanting to provide safe housing options to people who would benefit from the structure and fellowship of a shared living environment.

There is a lot of good work being done in the Independent Living community, and the ILA is proud to promote ILA members who work hard to make a difference. The ILA is dedicated to providing advocacy, training, and opportunities like the ILA Networking Event to give ILA members support for their business.
